Homer Adkins Has a Real Idea

Protect State Police From Politics

Homer Adkins addressing the recent state Democratic convention took a position regarding the Arkansas State Police that is unusual for incoming governors and legislators. The voters have been accustomed in recent years to hear a candidate urge abolition of the state police, if already established, or creation of the police, if previously dis-established. Always it was strictly a political question, with little thought to the real objective and the permanent value of a state police force. But it is this latter point that the next governor has seized upon.

Mr. Adkins proposed to the state convention, not that the police be abolished, but that the next legislature adopt a joint resolution for a constitutional amendment to take the police out of politics.

All citizens must recognize that changing conditions point indisputably to the need for a state police force, patroling the highways in a day when nearly all travel is by highway, and reinforcing the various county sheriffs in rural law-enforcement.

No sheriff can possibly do more than take care of his own county. His enforcement staff is entirely inadequate to take care of inter-county and inter-state law-violators.

As a matter of fact, the people have been inclined to let the FBI step in where the sheriff left off. But this is ridiculous. Law-enforcement beyond the county line can't jump clear to Washington, more than a thousand miles away. Law enforcement beyond the county should rest primarily with the state government —leaving only the largest criminal operators to be handled by the federal men.

Arkansas' problem in creating a state police force and then safe-guarding it against political interference isn't exactly new. The first modern state police force was established in Pennsylvania, the second in New York; and today many states have it. But everywhere there was the problem of creating and maintaining a group of dependable office whose real efficiency rested on the permanency of their positions from one political administration to another. You will find in any survey of state police forces anywhere that this is the real measure of their efficiency and their reputation.

We might as well find a solution for our own state police problem now, because sooner or later we'll have to find it.

The Arkansas Democrat points out in a timely editorial that with the National Guard preparing to go into military training the state police are about the only state-wide law-enforcement organization left open to emergency call.

That thought alone should spur us to action.

Safety of Our Government Is Free Elections

Roosevelt Asserts in College Anniversary Address

PHILADELPHIA —(AP)— President Roosevelt asserted Friday that "complete and enduring safety for our form of government" rests on maintaining free elections and added that "no dictator in history ever dared to run a gantlet of such an election.

Yet, he said, in an address climaxing the observance of the University of Pennsylvania's 200th anniversary, there are still some well meaning persons who have suggested recently that the right to vote be denied people who have lost their jobs and are on relief.

Roosevelt spoke in convention hall. It was an address which the White House declined either before or after its delivery to label political or non-political.

N. Y. Times Is for Willkie

Great Democratic Newspaper Deserts F. D. R.

NEW YORK —(AP)— The New York Times, which supported Franklin D. Roosevelt for president in 1932 and 1936, came out against a third term Thursday in an editorial supporting Wendell L. Willkie.

The Times, an independent-Democratic newspaper, has not supported a Republican presidential candidate since 1908. Observing that it was making its choice in "one of the greatest crises of this nation's history," the paper said it chose Willkie "primarily for these reasons:"

"Because we believe he is better equipped than Mr. Roosevelt to provide this country with an adequate defense; because we believe he is a practical liberal who understands the need of increased production; because we believe that the fiscal policies of Mr. Roosevelt have failed disastrously; because we believe that at a time when the traditional safeguards of democracy are falling everywhere it is particularly important to honor and preserve the American tradition against vesting the enormous powers of the presidency in the hands of any man for three consecutive terms of office."

Icebergs have been sighted so huge their surface has been estimated at 1,000 square miles.

OUR COUNTRY

24 of America's Greatest Authors Tell What AMERICA Means to Them

Robert P. Tristram Coffin Suggests That All of Us Try Being Americans Once More

Eleventh of 24 articles on "Our Country," written exclusively for NEA Service by the nation's most famous authors.

By ROBERT P. TRISTRAM COFFIN

Author of "Captain Abby and Captain John," "Lost Paradise," "Strange Holiness," etc.

The trouble with us Americans lately is that we have imported too many ideas and fears from Europe.

We have allowed our intellectuals to bring overseas the words Capital and Labor and the great servitudes behind them and apply them to a universally hard-working people. The Yankee sea captain used to be the sailor who worked hardest of all the crew. The sea captains wife used to be able to do a big washing and ironing and mending and then put on silks and go to parties in the evening. She was a new kind of lady in civilization.

The children of that captain and his wife are still here. The vast majority of Americans still work their way, whatever estates they may inherit. Most Americans who go to college now work their way through as surely as their fathers did when they came driving their estate on the hoof ,in a yoke of oxen, to the college door. And those who have tried to persuade us that there is one set of Americans who work and another who sit back and live off the fat of the land and the sweat of others deserve to be hanged.

For if they talk long enough, there will arise bricklayers and farmers whose sons will remain bricklayers and farmers and not go on to become Presidents and doctors who will breed sons good at laying brick and farming again.

We have let foreign ideas about the stigma of labor come in. The hammer and sickle symbols, not to Russia. The behive and the beaver belong on our state papers instead of the Roman bird of prey that happens to be there. Our Great Seal ought to be an ear of Indian corn. For we have grown great by sweat and sweet toil in the furrows and shops. We ought to remember we are sons of shopkeepers, be proud of it, and work and grow tough in our muscles and minds once more.

We have allowed a few snobs to talk about racial superiority in a country built in its beginnings and through its history out of a score of different nationalities and strong with the strength of the best in them all.

Aviation Really Speeds Things Up in Dutch East Indies; Month Trip Is Reduced to Hours

Swift Planes Succeed Slow River Boats in Dutch Orient

This is another dispatch from Peter Edson, editor of NEA Service, who was a member of the Pan American press flying party inaugurating clipper passenger service to New Zealand.

By PETER EDSON
Editor, NEA Service

BATAVIA, Dutch East Indies — Aviation, and with American-made planes, is playing a major role in the development of the Dutch East Indies, bringing closer together the thousand and more big, medium-sized and tiny islands in this South Pacific archipelago, 3000 miles from east to west, 1200 miles from north to south.

One example tells the tale. Formerly, a Dutch civil service controller going to a new post in Borneo's jungle had to spend a month by boat, traveling 2000 miles up river. Now he can be flown in from the capital in a mere matter of hours.

The whole story of flying to and in the Indies begins with Dr. Thomassen A. T. Van der Hoop, a prematurely bald young Dutchman who is now, of all things, curator of archaeology in the national museum at Batavia. Twenty-five years ago, as a young pilot in Holland, he conceived the crazy idea of flying from Amsterdam to the Indies. He got backing and with two other foolhardy souls, set out in an old amphibian, crossed Europe, the Near East, India—9000 miles in a month, pioneering a route which up to the outbreak of the war was flying it in a week, one plane every other day.

Service Started in 1928

Dr. Van Der Hoop saw no future in flying—for pilots—and so turned to the more lasting study of the impact of foreign invasions on Javanese society, and in his timeless way he considers the modern rule of the Dutch as merely the most recent of these invasions. Hindus and Mohammedans invaded and ruled the lands in their turn, beginning with the sixth century.

(Who's next? And will invasion be by air?)

Anyway, as early as 1928, aviation seemed here to stay and in that year the Royal Netherlands Indies airways, Koninklijke Nederlandsch-Indische Luchtvaart Maatschappij, KNILM for short, began a 65-mile service from Batavia to Bandoeng, Java. Today KNILM operates on nine different routes, flying 200,000 miles a month, carrying 45,000 passengers and 340,000 pounds of mail and freight a year.

From Sidney and Port Darwin, Australia, KNILM planes fly to Bali, most colorful spot in the Pacific. From Bali, on to Soerabaya and Batavia in densely populated Java, the scenery taking in volcanoes, crater lakes, rice, rubber, sugar and tobacco lands all laid out in the most intensive cultivation in the world.

Sunday in Batavia, capital of the Indies, is the day to spend at the big modern airport. Planes are in from Palestine, from Singapore and out to the distant spots of the island empire. They cross Sumatra, the big rubber producing area. They reach oil fields in places with high-sounding names like Palembang, Balikapapan, Tarakan, Bandjermasin—names to be relished by old-fashioned train caller.

Fish Eggs to Refinery Parts

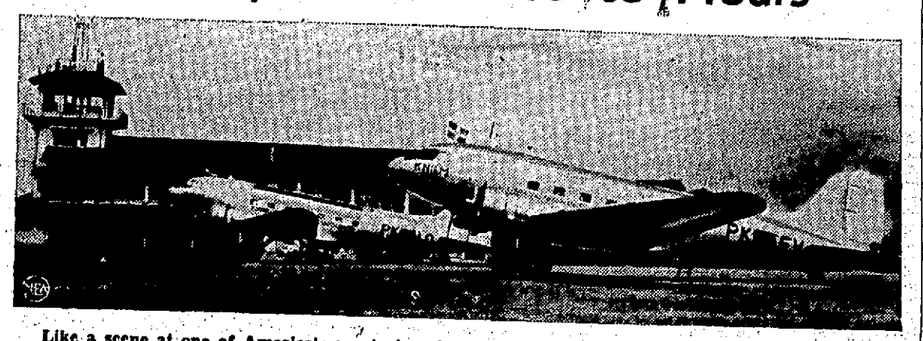

In freight they haul everything from fish eggs to stock a sultan's private trout stream to spare parts for a cracking unit at an oil refinery or fresh vegetables to some isolated white man in need of vitamins. Drugs and newsreels and the latest thrillers from Hollywood and periodicals from New York, with international postage running up to a dollar an ounce.

The fish eggs, by the way, may be descended from California rainbow descendetrout, imported to New Zealand in freshwater tanks 60 years ago. The machine parts keep the wheels going in the jungle plantations. Formerly, in case of a breakdown, it took from six months to a year to get replacements from Europe or America. Orders go out by radiogram, now, and replacements arrive in a couple of weeks.

All this internal air development is looking for new international connections. The Dutch would like to fly to Manila, tying up with Pan American clipper ships to Hongkong and the United States. Routes from Singapore to Siam and French Indo-China are canceled by the threat of hostilities from the direction of Japan. Routes to Europe must stop at Palestine. Routes to England go by way of Egypt and South Africa and thence by boat, a long, hard haul.

If the world could ever get over the wars and threats of wars, it might get on with its flying business.

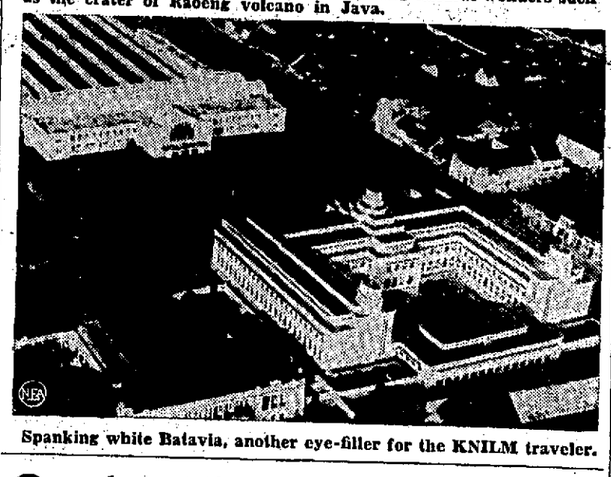

Impurity of rain is due to dust, pollen, gases and other substances which it washes out of the air.

Like a scene at one of America's great airports is this picture showing KNILM planes at Kemajoran, civil airport of Batavia, Dutch East Indies. Metal runways are a feature of this port.

Travelers on KNILM fly over breath-taking natural wonders such as the crater of Raoeng volcano in Java.

Spanking white Batavia, another eye-filler for the KNILM traveler.

Carol and Red-Headed Love Expect Sometime to Return

Magda Lupescu the Shadow Queen of Rumania

By ROGER GREENE

NEW YORK —(AP)— Cast into exile with a murderous gun-fire salute, ex-King Carol II of Rumania and his red-haired companion, Magda Lupescu, still may dream of history repeating itself—in a triumphant return to power.

Knowing the volatile temper of his Balkan countrymen, he well may wait a few years and then attempt another coup d'etat such as he achieved in June 1930.

That was a theatrical heart-breaker for "Bibi."

While Carol flew in a private plane to Bucharest, Magda overflowed with tears.

Feigning ignorance of Carol plot, she sobbed that Carol left her while she kept dinner waiting for him, and that their love was ended forever.

To stress the break-up of the romance, she even wrote a letter to government officials saying that Carol had severed the knot of her chain and had made a settlement of $80,000 and a French chateau on her.

That looked good, and as a clincher, she reprotedly took an overdose of poison a few months later in despair over the shattered romance.

That looked better, as viewed by the Rumanians. Carol, they felt, had regained his senses . . . and the nation's anxiety over this quasiclandestine affair subsided.

Within a few weeks. Magda returned.

The Shadow Queen

A freckled, hypnotic beauty, with flashing blue eyes and flaming hair, she soon became recognized as the "shadow queen" of Rumania, consulting with Carol on political and army appointments, lucrative government contracts, and the shaping of his foreign policy.

She swiftly became the richest, best-dressed, most bejewelled woman in Rumania—a "modern Madame Pompadour," the Rumanians angrily called her.

As early as 1935, Carol was warned publicly by Dr. Juliu Maniu, leader of the powerful Peasant party, that he must banish his redheaded charmer or the peasants, 85 per cent of the populace, would rise in revolt.

"As long as Mme. Lupescu remains in Rumania nobody will be able to accomplish anything good. Through her meddling in politics, 13 governments and four elections have followed on each other's heels," he declared.

"Mme. Lupescu is responsible for almost every evil in the country . . ."

Carol swiftly proclaimed martial law and forbade even mention of Magda's name.

But already the storm was gathering thunderheads, spurred by a manifesto signed by General Alexander Averescu Rumania's war hero, exhorting:

"Into the fire with the Jewish wolf, Lupescu! The rope for this vampire who stands between the crown and country! We must uproot the weeds of the palace Camarilla which stifles the monarchy. We must finish this red-haired witch who exercises such an occult influence over the king."

Magda laughed. She had Carol order precious diamonds from Amsterdam and swing-music phonograph records shipped from New York.

As Carol's dictatorship reign on the nation tightened, Magda emerged from her former sclusion, ordered dozens of close-fitting Paris gowns to set off her beauty, and entertained gay dinner parties with $40,000 gold plates at her palace in the fashionable Chausee section of Bucharest.

She Defies Peasants

She remained cool and firm in the face of 120,000 hostile peasants who marched through the capital streets demanding her banishment and those who advised her to leave the country immediately met with a flat refusal.

Gray appeared now in her hair and she inclined to stoutness, but envious wives of Bucharest officialdom freely admitted she was still fascinating, a brilliantly witty conversationalist, a ravishing woman even at 42. And her hold on King Carol was undisputable.

The World We Face

The United States is about to embark on a military program the like of which has never been even proposed, let alone achieved, in peace time.

At the moment, eyes are so riveted on London that one thinks of preparedness only in terms of the death-struggle between Britain and Germany. But the sober truth is that the whole world is today in such a state of turmoil that even regardless of the British-German war the United States would be forced to look to its armor. Look about the world and see what the United States confronts:

1. Germany has conquered the continent of Europe and now strikes at the heart of the centuries-old British empire.

2. Japan, after three years of undeclared war and conquest in China, now poises to spring southward through Indo-China. The whole balance of the Far East has been upset, with what upshot no man yet knows.

3. Russia, having engulfed three countries and large parts of two others, licks its chops at the prospect of still greater spoils.

4. Italy now makes its bid for widespread conquest in Africa, and at a Mediterranean dominance that may change the whole of southern Europe and the Near East.

5. Mexico may be plunged once more into civil disorder.

6. The Western Hemisphere tries to rally itself to united defense, but it is clear that any United States weakness will undermine close and friendly relationships that are vital to security.

In the face of such a prospect, it means a threat to no particular country or people that the United States resolves to cultivate its strength. The young men who go to camp with the National Guard or with the new selective service draftees go in no mood of menace to anyone. They go with a quiet determination to defend their own against any menace.

We muster our strength. They march under the Stars and Stripes. But behind the national banner might march also that banner of Revolutionary days, the banner with the coiled serpent and the motto, "Don't Tread on Me!"

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

The Voice of Wisdom Is the Voice of Experience That Is Carefully Studied
Text: Proverbs 4:10-27

By WILLIAM E. GILROY, D. D.
Editor of Advance

The voice of wisdom is the voice of experience, but of experience carefully considered and studied. It is not enough to take the voice of experience alone or in any limited way, because one may not see all the results of action.

Years ago, on a visit to New York, I preached on Sunday at a little church in a Long Island community. I was entertained for the day by a man who had an official position as inspector of certain public buildings in New York. He was manifestly a man of fine Christian integrity, with a family around him, particularly of boys, who reflected something of an ideal home life. It was a pleasure to be in the home.

When he told me of his occupation, I chaffed him somewhat good-naturedly, suggesting that men like him in such responsible positions of inspection could do much to prevent graft in city life. He took me quite seriously, and I have never forgotten his reaction.

He was not a man to pursue honesty as the best policy, but was a man inherently honest who would have been honest if it had not been for his own interest. But he spoke out of the voice of experience, as a father of sons to whom he was determined to set an honorable example.

He said that he had noticed, where men became wealthy and prosperous dishonestly, that although apparently no bad result came to themselves, the consequences upon their sons and members of their families were often very disastrous.

What does a grafting or dishonest father gain if he builds up worldly goods and attains a sort of sucess, to find that his sons are imitating his success and possibly his energy, but also his crookedness, and are going down to ruin in a worldly as well as a spiritual way, because of the false heritage that he has given them?

Observe what is happening in the world. Think about it, as that man had thought about it and observed. Take a long range view, and see if the voice of wisdom is not right when it links human welfare with uprightness and with right choice.

"The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." That is a rich and beautiful figure, and in contrast is the way of the wicked that is full of darkness and stumbling.

"Keep thy heart with all diligence," says the voice of wisdom, "for out of this are the issues of life." We think immediately of that other saying, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." It is in our will, the inner choice backed by good judgment, that our destiny rests.

To set before oneself the goal of good living, the way of honor and decency, is to be worldly wise as well as spiritually sound. Even where men have to make great sacrfices to maintain their integrity, the upright way is justified, for what comfort or gain is there for any man in realizing that what he has won has been won at the cost of himself?

Next to auto accidents, drowning and burns are the principal cause of accidental deaths in the United States.

Hot

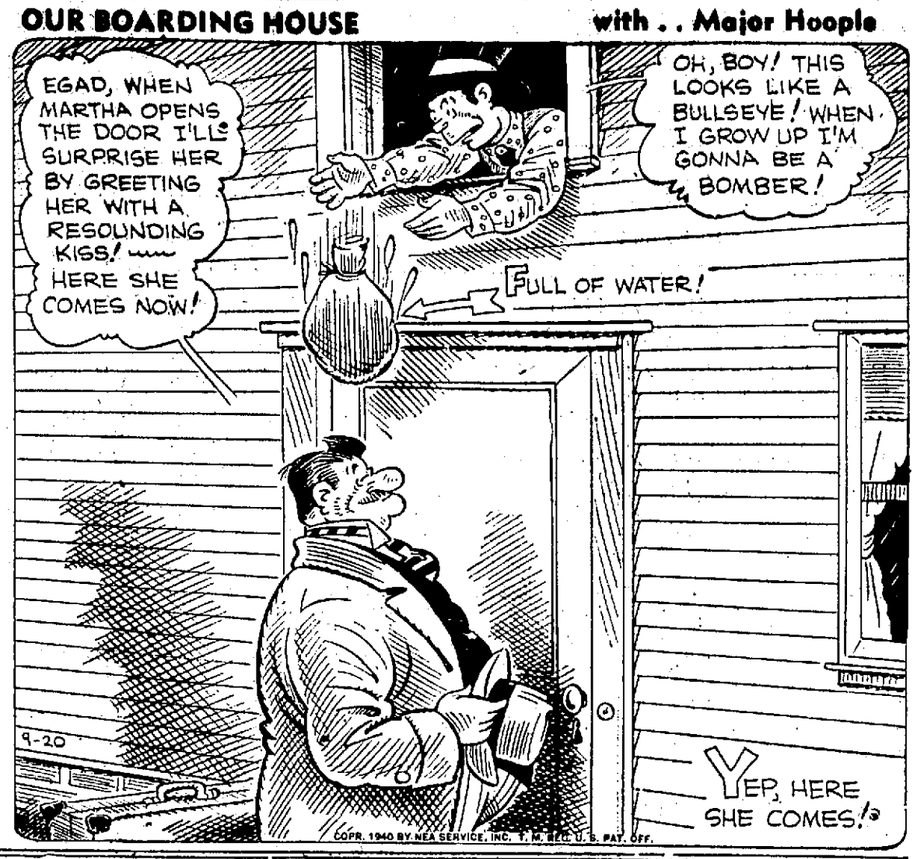

In the world's temperate zones an acre of land receives from the sun heat equivalent to that which would be received from burning 250 tons of hugh-grade coal.

Mystery

The birds once known as snowbirds now are all known as "puncoes," but no one seems to know just how this new name started or what it means.

Kitchen-Garland

The following articles will be interesting to the friends of the bride in this section of the state. It is from the "Arkansas Gazette."

"Mr. and Mrs. John McSwain Garland of Emmet announce the marriage of their youngest daughter, Max, to Dr. Burton Eveland Kitchen of San Francisco, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Kitchen of Watsonville, Cal. The marriage was solemnized at 7:30 Saturday evening, August 31, in the First Presbyterian church at Watsonville with the Rev. Claud Richmond saying the double-ring ceremony. Marking the altar five tall candelabra were banked at the base with ferns, gladiolus and delphinium. Preceding the ceremony, Miss Patsy Lundberg of San Francisco and Miss Helen Bronson of Watsonville, young cousins of the bridegroom, lighted the candles. Mrs. A. L. Jansen sang "I Love You Truly" and "Because" with Miss Ioa Rodgers at the organ. The traditional "Lohengrin" and Mendelssohn marches were used. The bride who was given in marriage by George Eveland, was lovely in an imported blue ensemble with navy accessories. She wore a string of pearls, a gift of the bridegroom, and carries a white prayer book with a marker of sweetheart roses, lilies of the valley and garlands of white ribbon. Miss Martha Eveland, cousin of the bridegroom, was the bride's only attendant. She was gowned in blue print with navy redingote and accessories. Her corsage was of gardenies. Dr. Harry Sawyer of San Francisco served Dr. Kitchen as best man. Following the ceremony an informal reception was held at the home of the bidegrooms parents. Centering the bride's table was a threetiered wedding cake, encircled with tube-roses. The young couple left for a honeymoon at Lake Tahoe. For traveling the bride was attired in a nautral linen suit with lipstick red accessories and a gardenia corsage. Mrs. Kitchen is a descendant of pioneer families of Arkansas. She is a graduate of Magnolia A and M. college and attended Henderson State Teachers College. She was graduated from Washington University School of Nursing, St. Louis, Mo., in June. Since that time she has been one of the head nurses at Barnes hospital in St. Louis. Dr. Kitchen received his B. A. and M. A. degrees from Leland Stanford University and his M. D. from Washington University. His fraternities are Alpha Chi Sigma, Phi Beta Pi and Sigma Ki, an honorary science fraternity. He is now serving his internship at San Francisco City and County hospital. Dr. and Mrs. Kitchen will be at home at 1202 Hamphire street, San Francisco.

Carol and

Except for his liaison with Mme. Lupescu, Carol had drastically changed from his one-time role of playboy prince.

He ruled firmly, playing his cards close to his chest in a cold and merciless political poker game against Hitler, Stalin and Mussolini.

At the start of the war, under pledges of support from Britain and France, he cast Rumania's fate with the Allies. Then France fell, and Britain, engaged in a fight for her life, could no longer help.

Despreately, Carol shifted toward the Rome-Berlin axis. He withdrew Rumania from the League of Nations, renounced former Allied pledges, and appointed pro-Nazi ministers to his cabinet.

It was too late. In June, the deluge began with an ultimatum by Soviet Russia. Stalin demanded Bessarabia and northern Bucovina. Carol yielded. Then Hungary demanded part of Transylvania. And Carol, under Berlin-Rome pressure, yielded again to save his dwindling kingdom for a better day.

But popular indignation was boiling. He had ceded too much and the fiery Rumanians rioted outside Carol's palace and shouted for his addication —and for the ousting of the woman who had wielded her behind-the-scenes influence over him.

Carol gave up. And at the end, while shots riddled the train that sped them into exile, Magda Lupescu hid under a black mantilla the tell-tale tresses that first attracted Carol nearly 20 years ago . . .

What we need to do is to recover our old solitude, our old assurance, and great pride. We need to get back to our fathers' belief that any man who works hard and stands up straight, and independent and bosses his own soul, no matter what race he comes from, is worth all the machines and kingdoms and theories of statecraft in the world. Faith in hard-working manhood is what we have grown by. If we keep that faith, Democracy will be safe from all the buzzards of Fascism and Nazism and Communism on the face of the earth. For those buzzards feed on carrion, where the people are dead or marked for death. Where people are really alive they are never found.

Let's be Americans again.

We know what we mean when we sing from childhood to old age, that song of freedom, "America," says Booth Tarkington in the next article of this series on "Our Country."

YESTERDAY: Vera's laughing comment that she is interested only in one man puzzles Sue Mary. Nick insists he is in love with Sue Mary, predicts their future in a changing world. Sue Mary is happy, remembering his words. Suddenly she senses something is wrong. Kitty tells her a valuable paper has been lost.

VERA EXPLAINS THE LOSS

CHAPTER XI

SUE MARY nodded, suddenly tense at the importance of the news Kitty had.

"Of course I know all that. After all, we've seen how the papers in the vault have been guarded, and we've seen these men coming and going—the ones that look like movie G-men."

"Then listen to this. A file has been stolen, or lost, or mislaid. Personally, I think Miss Grant put it in such a safe place that we can't find it. Today's her day off, and they've been hunting all over town for her.

"Meanwhile, though, you'd think we're all Fifth Columnists. More strange men have been dashing in and out of old Ross Clark's office, and he's had everything gone over with a fine-tooth comb."

"But what do you suppose the file was? I mean, why was it so important?"

"Good heavens, how should I know? Half the time I can't make head nor tail out of the stuff I'm typing. But I suppose when it's all put together it does mean something. They called me in and asked me if I'd typed some pages about a new gasoline order. Does that mean anything to you?"

Sue Mary shook her head. "No—but I think Miss Grant asked Vera to type some such thing yesterday. I know Vera was almost ready to go home when Miss Grant came out and told her to do something. I heard her mention gasoline—"

"Vera—" Kitty's well-defined red lips tightened. "She's supposed to be so efficient, but I notice she always has time to drop her work when young Ross Clark comes in. He was here last night, just after you left, and she inveigled him into conversation two minutes after he came through the door." Kitty's eyes narrowed and a smile came to her lips.

"It would be funny if she had that file. If she was so interested in Ross last evening that she forgot to type that order and it's the one they're all hunting for now. Wouldn't that be just too lovely?"

"Lovely—? No, it certainly wouldn't be lovely," Sue Mary said emphatically. She stared at Kitty, mindful of the girl's dislike for Vera.

"Don't be petty. Anyway, you or I could have made the same mistake just as easily. If we didn't know a paper was important, and we got it to type just before going home, we might do the same thing and be in the same jam. Furthermore, we don't know if Vera has it at all."

* * *

BUT her own words didn't carry conviction. She knew Vera had the paper. Sue Mary was sure of that and the realization left her worried. Vera was new in the office and it wouldn't look well for her to be the cause of all this confusion.

Sue Mary shrugged her shoulders, though, as Kitty smiled wisely before going back to the office. Vera was the epitome of efficiency, and certainly, if she had unknowingly held on to an important paper, it wasn't a criminal act.

Back in the office, Sue Mary found an excuse to take some work over to the filing cabinet near Vera's desk. She looked down at the dark-haired girl. During the weeks in which she had come to know Vera at the YP headquarters, had eaten midnight suppers with her, Nick and Natalie, had talked religion, philosophy, politics, war, and social problems, she had come to admire Vera's intelligence, to envy her calm and poise.

Now she would have to try and help her out of this situation. She hated to be involved in any difficulty at the office, but she couldn't get out from under this.

Now she would have to try and help her out of this situation. She hated to be involved in any difficulty at the office, but she couldn't get out from under this.

"Vera," she said in a low voice, "Mr. Clark is in a terrible state. He's mislaid or lost a paper. They're trying to find Miss Grant to see if she knows where it is. It's something about a gasoline order. Have they questioned you yet?"

No flicker of expression passed across Vera's face. Her brow was calm, her lips soft and parted in a half-smile. Only the pupils in her dark eyes dilated. Sue Mary felt a little stab of fear, but when Vera's voice answered, low and pleasant, she felt a flush of embarrassment pass over her face at her own doubts.

"Gasoline order? I don't know, Sue Mary. It might be here in this stuff." She ruffled some papers on her desk. "Miss Grant gave me a whole pile of work last evening before she left."

She looked up and smiled. "I suppose Kitty has already told you. I mean that young Ross Clark came in and talked to me. I knew she was watching every move I made. Anyway, he suggested driving me home, but I vetoed that. I did stop to have a drink with him, though. And because I didn't want to keep him waiting around here with Kitty looking like a green-eyed cat, I did push some of this stuff aside for today."

She stared out the window, lost in pleasant thoughts. "He's rather interesting. As a type, I mean. Of course, he's interested only in himself and his set. Never had a real idea in his life, I suppose—" Her voice trailed off and Sue Mary leaned over and took her by the shoulders.

"This is serious, Vera. Listen to what I'm saying. This gasoline order has the whole place in an uproar. It's important. Something to do with a government order. There are government men here now. If you knew this office you'd realize—"

Vera's eyes focused on Sue Mary's face. She seemed to come back to reality.

"Important—really? I'm terribly sorry if I've done something wrong. Perhaps Miss Grant meant me to type it before I left yesterday and leave it on Mr. Clark's desk. You know how it was, though. I wanted to get away. But I guess it's safe. I'm sure it's here with these other papers."

* * *

AND it was. While Sue Mary chewed her pale lips in frantic horror, Vera calmly took the papers and headed for Mr. Clark's office.

"You mean you're going right in there and face him?" Sue Mary asked numbly.

"Of course. And nothing's going to happen, my dear. They'll simply think I'm a stupid fool and they'll be so glad to get the darn thing back that they won't bother with me."

Which apparently was exactly what happened, Sue Mary decided, watching Vera come back in a few moments and continue calmly with her work.

"If I made such a mistake I'd never get off that easily," she told herself.

Funny how rightly Vera had analyzed the situation, too. Sue Mary made a mouth. Her mind never worked so rationally when things happened.

Vera astounded her more and more. Her training with the YP had given Vera an exterior that nothing could crack. Sue Mary wondered if anything ever could penetrate that assurance.

Buick Prepares for Auto Show

To Exhibit Complete Line in Three Displays

FLINT, Mich. — Preparations for extensive participation in the Detroit, New York, and Chicago automobile shows next month were announced today by W. F. Hufstader, general sales manager of the Buick division of general motors.

Buick will exhibit its complete line of cars in all three displays, Mr. Hufstader said, in addition to carrying on collateral activity among dealers, and salesmen in the Metropolitan areas affected by the shows.

Featured at the Detroit show will be a dealers' and salesmen's meeting covering all Buick retail outlets in the Detroit Metropolitan area, under the direction of C. H. Rey, Detroit zone manager. More than 400 will attend the session scheduled for Friday, Sept. 11.

According to Mr. Rey, this manufacturer will feature the new "fireball" engine and dual compound carburetion in mechanical exhibits at convention hall, together with other special displays designed to demonstrate a new steering gear, new direction signals and other features of its 1941 cars.

He said preliminary canvasses show unusual interest in the show this year, due to marked changes offered by the industry in design and construction of new models. New streamlined styling and mechanical advancements having to do particularly with increased power, performance and fuel economy, have provoked exceptional curiosity among the motoring public, he said.

At New York, special exhibits will be staged by Buick in connection with the General Motors show at the Waldorf Astoria hotel, while the Buick bug, famed old time racer, will be shown in an unique display scheduled for the national automobile show in Grand Central palace. This division of general motors will hold a mammoth dealer meeting in New York prior to the opening of the show there, attended by dealers from throughout the Atlantic seaboard states.

Chicago activities include similar arrangements during the automotive trade association's big show at the stockyards amphitheatre.

According to Mr. Hufstader, Buick again was awarded third place in the New York Automobile Show as a result of volume of sales among A. M. A. members during the previous year. This is the third successive year Buick has held this position, he said.

Chevrolet Has 2 New Series

1940 Sales Leaders Again Make Bid for 1941

Chevrolet, which led the industry in sales again in 1940, makes its bid for continued pre-eminence, in 1941, with two series of new cars, in which modern streamline styling, and larger, rommier bodies, combine with numerous mechanical improvements to produce the finest Chevrolets ever built.

The famous Chevrolet vacuum power shift, which created a sensation when introduced in 1939, is standard on all models of both series, at no extra cost.

Bodies are longer, wider, and much more massive looking. Their appearance mass is concentrated near the ground by changes in body and fender contour, as well as by judicious use of decoration and trim. Windshields, rear windows, and upper portion of sides of body are increased in slope, and the tops of side windows are one inch lower than in 1940.

The cars' sleek appearance is heightened by the omisson of running board as well as by the use of concealed hinges on all doors and trunks, the sole exception being the rear deck door hinges of the coupes and cabriolet. Sides of the body extend outward and downward noticeably farther than last year, and the skirt of each door conceals a convenient rubber-ribbed safety step to faciliatate entrance and egress. The safety and convenience provided by a running board are thus retained, while the less desirable features are eliminated. Dirt, water, snow and ice cannot accumulate upon the step, because it is efectively sheltered under the flar of the door's lower edge. This not onl ymakes the care easier to keep clean, but assures a firm, dry footing to persons getting in and out.

New and more massive-appearing die-cast radiator grille frame surrounding horizontal bars; new hood, and front fenders from which the valley is entirely eliminated, dress the front end of the car. Sealed beam headlamps, integral with front fenders, are relocated for better appearance, separate parking lamps of flus type being set in the fnders just beneath.

The grille refinements are especially notworthy. Replacement of stampings with die-castings has made it possible to gain more pleasing detail of design and shape, as well as to heighten the durability of this unit. And as the lowering of the body crease line and body belt moulding tend to accentuate the car's lowness as viewed from the side, so do the heavier horizontal bars of the radiator grille emphasize lowness and width, as it is viewed from the side, so do the heavier horizontal bars of the radiator grille emphasize lowness and width as it is viewed from the front. The new grouping of lamps, and the new, wider bumper, also contribute to this effect.

Interiors are roomier as well as more luxurious. They embody numerous refinements, whose aggregate effect is to make these cars the equals, in riding comfort, driving ease, and safety, of cars of far higher price. Their restful, roomy ease is apparent the moment the door is opened. Rear seats are lower, a change which not only makes for comfort, but also—by bringing passenger weight nearer the ground—contributes to stability and safety. There is greater room across the seat cushions, and also at elbow and shoulder levels. Footroom is more than ample, as before. Front seats are substantially wider, and are adjustable, and those in two-door models have convenient divided-type backs.

Headlining and body inside lining are identical in both series, but upholstery material differs between the Special Deluxe and Master Deluxe. On the former, it is a two-tone striped canda cloth, with tan Bedford cord as an option, while in the latter it is attractive canda cloth in a tasteful herringbone weave.

Treatment of the instrument panel is especially pleasing. On the Special Deluxe, the basic color is beige with a contrast of wood-grain design, and this is set off attractively by means of bright metal trim. The instrument cluster, including oil gauge, gasoline gauge, ammeter, and engine heat indicator, is at the extreme left. The large circular speedometer dial is adjacent, directly in front of the driver. The center space on the dash is fitted with a grille for radio installation, and above, on the Special Deluxe, is an ash receiver; and, below, is an electric cigar lighter. Next to the grille toward the right, and balancing the speedometer, is a clock, and finally, at the extreme right, the roomy glove compartment with locking knob and interior light. The group ing on the Master Deluxe is similar, but the basic color is tan, the clock, lighter, ash receiver and some decorative trim are omitted, and the glove compartment is not lighted. The indirect illumination of the instrument panel in both series may be dimmed or turned off entirely by rotating the headlamp control knob.

Attention to appearance extends to the floors and foot-room. Openings around pedals and steering column are neatly sealed, and durable floor-coverings are provided. On the Master Deluxe, these are heavy ribbed rubber, while on the Special Deluxe they are rubber with attractive carpet inserts, The area along the bottoms of the seats and doors, in the Special Deluxe series, is trimmed with imitation leather to prevent soiling and scuffing, and etched aluminum door sill plates add a further pleasing touch.

Rear compartments are designed for maximum comfort in both series, and in the Special Deluxe, they achieve luxury as well. Both series are equipped with robe cords across the rear of front seats in four-door models. The Special Deluxe has in addition, combination assist straps and coat hooks, rear compartment ash receiver, and sliding rear-quarter windows. Two of the new sliding type sun visors, adjustable to give full protection against glare, are furnished in the Special Deluxe series, and one in the Master Deluxe.

Many Football Games Friday

Texarkana, Nashville Take Southwest Spotlight

While Hope travels to Smackover for a battle with the Buckaroos Friday night other southwest towns offer plenty of action with the spotlight going to Nashville and Telarkana.

Many Hope football fans, who believe the Hope-Smackover game is too far away, will find plenty of entertainment at Nashville where the Scrappers take on a strong Camden team or at Texarkana where the Razorbacks will battle the highly-touted Hot Springs Trojans. Even nearer home we have the Prescott Curly Wolves engaging the Mena team on Prescott's field.

Those who go in for, perhaps, a more advanved brand of football journey to Arkadelphia where Henderson's non-lettermen take on Ouachita's non-lettermen.

It's possible that some might go to El Dorado to witness the Wildcat-Haynesville game which holds much interest for local fans as El Dorado comes to Hope next Friday night.

Americans Dig Deep for Reserving Charity

By TOM WOL
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK — Americans dig deep into their pockets to give hard-earned dollars to many a charity deserving neither hope nor faith.

"Probably never before in the past 20 years has there been so great a chance that a large per cent of the average donor's dollar will not go to the cause he gives to support.

So says youngish, handsome Leonard J Cushing, chief executive of the National Information Bureau. The bureaus sole function is the investigation of national and international philanthropic fund raising organizations and the endorsing of those which meet its high "minimum standards."

Cushing feels the avernge American stands a good chance of giving unwisely because of the tremendous number of agencies from which he must choose. Almost 400 groups are now raising funds for war relief abroad and "a new one springs up every day."

Americans have always been generous. During the last World War period from 1914 to 1921, they donated some $2,400,000,000. In the flush days of the 1920s they gave about two billion dollars annually to charities of all kinds. And the National Information Bureau estimates about $10,000,000 to $100,000,000 of that annually went down the drain of outright fraud.

Calls for help today are more numerous and appealing than ever. In the first six months of the present war Americans responded with more than $9,800,000.

The N. I. B. does not consider fraud the biggest threat to gifts. It blames perhaps 75 per cent of the waste on two groups: (1) agencies, with good intentions but inefficient managements: and (2) agencies with well-intentioned boards who are duped by unscrupulous promoters.

The bureau has found most of these groups are able to exist because many prominent Americans will lend their "names" to the case. They become honorary members of many mal-administered charities because they do not investigate, if at all, until after endorsing.

Take the well-endorsed National Disabled Soldiers' League, investigated by congress in the early 1920's. Administrative costs were found to have eaten up about $990 of every $1000 raised.

The National Information Bureau never starts prosecution of questionable or fraudulent charities. Because of its need to protect itself from libel, its reports are available only to members— i. e. groups or individuals who pay minimum annual dues of $10.

Since many local charitable organizations, including over 400 of the community chests in the major U. S. cities, are members of the N. I. B., the average citizen can investigate many appeals through his local charity group.

The National Information Bureau was established in 1918, at the suggestion of Newton D. Baker, as a non-profit educational organization. During its 22-year existence it has investigated more than 4000 philanthropic organizations, of which at least half have not measured up to its lofty standards.
